

Unit 6 - Born With a Mic

6A Introduction

A lot of rappers claim that they were born with a mic. Well, what if one of them really was? This is his story.

6B Song Lyrics

I'm on the subway right now, uh, with my mom, but don't worry about that part. I'm in London, and I'm on tour. Let me tell you a little bit of something about myself though.

I had a mic attached to my umbilical chord,
So believe this: I was rhyming as a fetus.
Came out in the world, just to find some new beats,
Looked up at the doctor, said, "Yo, who's he?
Can he make a phat beat like Biggie's 'Juicy'?
Something with some kick to it, like Bruce Lee?"
My birth was not normal or orthodox,
'Cause neither the nurses nor the docs
Had ever seen a baby with skills or prowess like mine.
"You've got a son!" Yeah, I'm ready to shine.
Mom wrapped me up and brought me home,
Started to nurture me and help me grow.
But, um, I had a temper,
You don't want to tamper or mess with my temper,
I'm a devil in Pampers.
I needed some maternal care, that's from my mom,
But I also needed to blow up the charts like a bomb.
So I recorded a song, wild and bold,
To make people forget that I was just nine months old.
So follow my narrative, my story unfolds,
They called me Emcee Baby Food.
Made my stage debut at the age of two,
First time I stepped on the stage they paid me, too.
They couldn't fathom, understand or figure
How this little baby with a mic was the nicest spit-kicker.
The crowd was bewildered, all confused,
Until I busted like Busta Rhymes and showed the dudes.
I never got snared in the snare or caught in the beat,
So I finished the show and hopped in my Jeep.
Okay, it wasn't an authentic or real Jeep,
It was plastic, it went beep-beep on the sidewalk.

*But all the one-year-old ladies,
They thought I was crazy.
They all called me Baby,
"Emcee Baby Food is crazy!"*

My album dropped, people bought it like candy,
 I was always clever, smart and canny.
 Flew to L.A. just to win a Grammy,
 Didn't go alone; I brought my nanny.
 A No. 1 single, that was "mission accomplished,"
 People catered to my needs, did what I wanted.
 The most intense moment, the climax,
 Was when they made a movie about me in IMAX.
 But a few days later I turned on the news,
 And saw another baby straight rapping for dudes.
 Called him Lil' Tito and the dude could kick it,
 Had the nice flows, yeah, the kid was wicked.
 So I confronted Tito at his next show,
 Came face-to-face with him to let him know
 That Emcee Baby Food was number one,
 Said, "Pack up your toys, Tito—you're done!"
 That was the start of the biggest baby beef
 Since...well, it was probably the biggest baby beef ever.
 He said, "Oh, you want to battle?
 Drop your mic right now; pick up your rattle.
 Emcee Baby Food, you're so soft and mushy,
 Lil' Tito goes hard, so don't push me."
 I looked the dude up and down, and then I told him this:
 "My good looks make the baby models nervous,
 I'm not all up in the club but I'm getting bottle service.
 Is that your crew? You should call them off,
 Don't mess with my toddler entourage."

Hook

Yeah, yeah, yeah, what's up man? This is Lil' Tito right here, you know what I mean. We squashed our little beef, and all that, our little battle. You know what I mean? We're gonna let bygones be bygones. We're gonna come out with a new tape, you know what I mean? Ga-ga-goo-goo records. Check us out. Googoo me. Uh-huh. Somebody get my bottle, man.

6G Understanding What You Read

authentic / bewildered / canny / cater / climax / confront / debut / fathom / maternal / narrative / nurture / orthodox / prowess / snare / tamper

Read the passage below. Then answer the questions.

The Roxanne Wars

From the early days of hip-hop, rappers have been involved in rivalries. One rapper will release a single “dissing” (or making fun of) another rapper. The rapper who has been dissed will then record a response. The rappers don’t often confront one another face-to-face; they usually just battle each other on record. However, a few rivalries have gotten out of hand; for instance, a rivalry between East Coast and West Coast rappers in the 1990s climaxed with the murders of Tupac Shakur and Notorious B.I.G. Most of the time, though, these rivalries are just a sassy way of challenging someone’s prowess on the mic.

One of the first hip-hop rivalries is also one of the strangest. In 1984, the hip-hop trio U.T.F.O. released their debut single, a song called “Hanging Out.” The song did not sell well, until DJs began flipping the record over and playing the track on the opposite side—a song called “Roxanne, Roxanne.”

“Roxanne, Roxanne” was a narrative song about a girl who didn’t really exist. In the song, the members of U.T.F.O. try to get Roxanne’s attention, but she ignores them. The song pokes fun at Roxanne for being stuck up. “Roxanne, Roxanne” became a huge hit due to its funny lyrics and catchy hook. Although Roxanne was not based on an authentic person, U.T.F.O. hired an actress named Adelaida Martinez to play Roxanne in the video.

Not long after the song became a hit, U.T.F.O. canceled an appearance on “Rap Attack,” a New York radio show hosted by DJ Mr. Magic. Mr. Magic was annoyed, so he hired a 14-year-old rapper named Shanté Gooden to work with producer Marley Marl to record a response to “Roxanne, Roxanne.” The result was the single “Roxanne’s Revenge,” released under the name Roxanne Shanté. Unlike “Roxanne, Roxanne,” “Roxanne’s Revenge” directly dissed real people—the members of U.T.F.O. “Roxanne’s Revenge” was also a smash hit, and the battle was on.

With both songs on the charts, the canny members of U.T.F.O. recognized the potential to keep the rivalry going. They recorded another song called “The Real Roxanne,” with vocals by Adelaida Martinez. After this single, others started to jump on the bandwagon. Another female rapper, Sparky D., released a song called “Sparky’s Turn (Roxanne, You’re Through).” Both Shanté and Martinez released follow-up singles. A group called Crush Groove released a song called “Yo, My Little Sister (Roxanne’s Brothers)” from the perspective of Roxanne’s older brothers. All told, more than 30 songs were released in the battle...a battle about a person who never even existed!

1. According to the author, how often do rap rivalries get out of hand?

- (A) Never
- (B) Rarely
- (C) Most of the time
- (D) Always

Word Breakdown

The word orthodox is a combination of the Greek roots ortho-, meaning “straight or correct,” and doxia-, meaning “opinion.” So to be orthodox is to have “the correct opinion.” Since it’s difficult to know what the “correct” opinion is about anything, the word is more often used to mean “conservative.” It’s often applied to religion, as in “Orthodox Judaism” or “Orthodox Christianity.”

The word maternal comes from the Latin root mater-, meaning “mother.” A complementary word for maternal is paternal, which means “of the father.” These words are easy to remember as a pair, because they start with ma and pa!
